

Report: Handling a Guest Complaint About Budweiser Service at The Beer Café

Difficulty: Hard

Role: Frustrated Guest Who Visited The Beer Café

Date: 13/03/2026

Total Messages: 19

Score: 65

Status:  Passed

Performance Summary

The Guest Relations Executive (GRE) demonstrated a willingness to apologize and gather information, but struggled to move beyond generic assurances and address the guest's core concerns about tangible solutions and future guarantees. While the GRE attempted to empathize and offered a compensation, the repeated use of vague language like 'surveillanced strictly' and 'session for you' led to further frustration and skepticism from the guest. The GRE's responses became repetitive, and they failed to effectively rebuild the guest's confidence. The offer of a complimentary appetizer and discount was a good step, but it was undermined by the lack of a clear, convincing plan for improvement.

Performance Breakdown

1. Communication Clarity

Score: 50/100

The GRE used phrases that were unclear and potentially alarming to the guest, such as 'staff will be surveillanced strictly again' and 'a session for you.' This lack of clarity fueled the guest's suspicion. While apologies were present, the core message about how the issue would be resolved lacked precision.

2. Objection Handling

Score: 55/100

The GRE acknowledged the guest's objections and apologized, but struggled to provide concrete answers. When the guest questioned the meaning of 'surveilled' and 'session,' the GRE doubled down on these vague terms rather than clarifying or offering alternative actions. The GRE did eventually pivot to retraining and temperature control, which was better, but the initial handling of objections was weak.

3. Value Proposition

Score: 60/100

The GRE eventually offered a complimentary appetizer and a discount, which is a good gesture. However, the value proposition was weakened by the preceding unclear communication and the guest's lingering doubt about the core service issue. The offer was presented as a way to 'give you the experience you deserved,' but the guest was not convinced this experience would be delivered.

4. Active Listening

Score: 70/100

The GRE did listen and acknowledge the guest's points, repeating back the core issues of warm beer and poor service. They also asked clarifying questions about the outlet and time. However, the GRE seemed to miss the underlying need for concrete, verifiable solutions and instead focused on repeating assurances.

5. Confidence & Professionalism

Score: 70/100

The GRE maintained a professional and polite tone throughout. They used appropriate greetings and apologies. However, their confidence wavered when challenged on the specifics of their proposed solutions, leading to repetitive and less convincing statements. The repeated use of vague terms also detracted from their professionalism.

Recommendations

- Focus on using clear and specific language when discussing corrective actions. Instead of 'surveilled strictly,' explain the retraining process, focusing on specific skills like temperature checks and proper serving techniques.
- When a guest questions a proposed action, provide a more detailed explanation of what that action entails and how it directly addresses their concern. For example, explain what the 'session' for staff would cover.
- Practice active listening to identify the guest's underlying need for reassurance and tangible proof of improvement, not just apologies and promises. Offer concrete steps the guest can observe or verify on their next visit.
- Develop a more robust set of service recovery options. While a discount is good, consider offering a specific guarantee on the next beverage or a follow-up from management to rebuild trust.

Conversation Transcript

Frustrated Guest Who Visited The Beer Café

Hello. I visited The Beer Café last night, and honestly, I'm really disappointed with the experience. I ordered a Budweiser, and it wasn't even properly chilled. The staff also didn't seem interested in helping when I mentioned it.

You

Good afternoon, sir. Thank you for contacting the Beer Cafe. My name is Manalika and I'm the part of the guest relations team. I'm really sorry to hear about your experience. Could you please tell me what exactly happened last night?

Frustrated Guest Who Visited The Beer Café

Well, as I already said, I ordered a Budweiser. It was supposed to be cold, right? Instead, I got this lukewarm disappointment that tasted utterly flat. When I pointed it out, the server just shrugged it off like I was being difficult.

You

I truly apologize for that experience. That definitely not the standard we aim to provide beer cafe. Thanks for bringing this to our attention. May I know which outlet you visited time and at what time?

Frustrated Guest Who Visited The Beer Café

I was at the [mention specific outlet if you remember, otherwise say "one downtown"] around 8 PM. Frankly, I'm not sure why you need to know the exact time, the beer was warm, and the service was appalling. Is that not enough to understand the problem?

You

I really understand your frustration. Thank you for sharing the details. If I were in your position, I would feel disappointed as well. I sincerely apologize for the inconvenience caused. This issue will be reported to the manager of the outlet and the staff will be surveillanced strictly again and we'll have a session for you. Your feedback is extremely important to us and I will personally ensure this is reported to the outlet manager so this issue is addressed immediately.

Frustrated Guest Who Visited The Beer Café

"A session for me"? What does that even mean? And "surveillanced strictly"? Sounds like you're just going to point fingers. I want to know what you're actually going to do to fix this so it doesn't happen to someone else.

You

And I personally ensure this, this is reported to the outlet manager, so this issue is addressed immediately and the staff of that outlet would be surveillanced, would be strictly surveillanced again and this won't happen again with you or any other customer.

Frustrated Guest Who Visited The Beer Café

You keep saying "surveillanced again" and "won't happen again." That's a lot of talk, but what does it actually translate to? Are you going to retrain them on how to serve a cold beer, or just give them a stern talking-to? I'm not interested in empty promises.

You

Once the staff will be trained again and a proper instruction will be given to the staff again, so this won't happen to any of our customers.

Frustrated Guest Who Visited The Beer Café

So, what, they'll get a little pep talk and suddenly know how to keep beer cold? I'm still not convinced. This sounds like a temporary fix, not a real solution. What guarantees do I have that the next Budweiser I order won't be warm too?

You

I made sure, sir, the staff will be trained again on what to serve, at what temperature the beer should be served to the customers, so the customer doesn't face any issues in the future. And as a gesture of apology, I would like to offer you a complimentary appetizer on your next visit along with the special guest discount, so we can give you the experience you deserved the first time.

Frustrated Guest Who Visited The Beer Café

A complimentary appetizer and a discount? That's nice, I suppose, but it doesn't change the fact that my first impression was terrible. Frankly, I'm not sure I'm even inclined to come back after this. You've given me a reason to doubt the quality of service there.

You

We're really sorry, sir, and I'm really sure that this won't happen again on your next visit. I personally will visit to the every beer cafe and especially to the cafe you missed it, and we'll keep an eye at every staff and everything happening over there. And we'll personally look after this issue you have faced last night.

Frustrated Guest Who Visited The Beer Café

You're going to personally visit every Beer Café? And "keep an eye on everything"? That sounds like an awful lot of effort for one lukewarm beer. Frankly, I'm skeptical that this is actually going to happen, or that it will even make a difference.

You

It will surely make a difference and you won't face any problem in future. Thank you for giving us the opportunity to make things right. We truly appreciate your feedback and we hope to welcome you again soon for a much better experience. Have a wonderful day.

Frustrated Guest Who Visited The Beer Café

Look, I appreciate the sentiment, but "surely" and "hope" aren't exactly ringing assurances. I'll believe it when I see it – or rather, when I taste it. Until then, my confidence in your ability to deliver a properly chilled Budweiser is, shall we say, quite low.

You

Please give us this chance again, sir, and I will make sure that you won't feel disappointed again.

Frustrated Guest Who Visited The Beer Café

You've said that already. What makes you so sure this time will be any different? I'm still not convinced you've actually addressed the root cause, or if this is just more lip service to appease a complaining customer.